Gospel Reflection

The Immaculate Conception of our Lady, and her Assumption are usually cited as the only instances of the exercise of Papal Infallibility. However, we also believe that all the bishops together in union with the Holy Father can also teach infallibly (this being spelled out at the Second Vatican Council), and the two great Marian dogmas fit more neatly into this category than into purely 'Papal' infallibility. But I think that it might be argued that there have been two occasions when the Pope alone has defined the faith for the Church, and both of them are to be found in the Bible. The first is in today's Gospel, where, the other disciples having havered, St Peter proclaims clearly on their behalf the identity of our Lord; You are the Christ, the Son of the living God. Jesus responds directly with Simon Peter's commission that we are accustomed to relate directly to his Papal office: You are Peter, and on this rock... It might be argued that Simon the disciple was not yet fully Peter the Pope, but it is interesting that his profound, unquestionably correct inspiration should be, as it were, the spark which brings the Lord's commission of Simon Peter for the Papal office. The other exercise of something like Papal Infallibility, by the way, can also be found in the Acts of the Apostles, (Chapter 10) where St Peter, under direct inspiration, teaches that Gentiles are equal in the sight of God with Jews and need not keep the Law of Moses.

The papal office does have its limitations, however. It certainly does not suggest that everything a Pope says is going to be infallible; only three small verses after today's Gospel passage, our Lord rebukes Peter very sharply indeed: Get behind me, Satan! for his suggestion that our Lord's death should be prevented. And we have the unfortunate example of many popes who have been no better than they should be, and some a great deal worse. Which is why the First Vatican Council chose to hedge the charism of Infallibility around with stringent conditions—no doubt providentially—lest some future Pope confuse, like his great predecessor, St Peter, his private judgment with his divinely-appointed office.
