Gospel Reflection

Today is unique in the Church's liturgy because it has not one but two Gospels. The first you will only hear if you are at one of the main Masses, because it accompanies the procession with palms that gives today's celebration its name. All four Gospels attest to this remarkable welcome that our Lord received on this occasion, though St John (whose version of the solemn entry of our Lord is given as an alternative to St Mark's today) observes that scripture (Zechariah 9:9) had prophesied it. We might note how the Benedictus of the Mass recalls the cry of the Jerusalemites: Blessed is he who comes in the name of the Lord. Hosanna in the highest! The particular poignancy of the event, however, is that we know that so very soon those hosannas will turn to Crucify him! even as in the Mass they precede the same crucifixion presented sacramentally.

And so this is particularly brought out today as the second, long, Gospel is read, usually known as the Passion. What can one say about this that would not be in some sense a trivialization of the most profound event in human history? Only, perhaps, that one should strive to enter into it as deeply as possible; in our churches it is customary for the congregation to say the 'crowd' parts out loud. This brings home to us the tragic fact that it is we ourselves who put our Saviour on the cross. We are every bit as responsible as the Jews of that day. He did not die because some nasty-minded individuals two thousand years ago were determined to do away with him—though that was the ostensible reason—but because you and I sinned, separated ourselves from God; our all-loving Saviour chose to undergo all this torment so that the breach could be healed.

Were the whole realm of nature mine,
That were an offering far too small.
Love so amazing, so divine
Demands my soul, my life, my all.
